Most Expensive Doll

The highest price paid at auction for a doll is €90,200 (Euro currency) for a 1909 bisque Kammer and Reinhardt doll at Sotheby's, London on February 16, 1989. Mme. Dina Vierny, who had planned to open a Museum of Childhood in France, bought the doll.

Treating the "Stickies" of Plastic Dolls

Often, older plastic or vinyl dolls will wear over the years, causing a sticky substance to work its way to the surface of the doll's "skin." When the plasticizer migrates out of the vinyl (basically, a poorly mixed batch of plastic at the time the doll was made), it causes this stickiness. You can gently wash the plastic (that helps a bit) and when dry, dust the doll with talcum powder. This will not fix the problem; it is a cosmetic fix that may dry the plasticizer up for awhile and allow you to display the doll until more of the substance migrates out.

In the early days of plastic (late 40s and early 50s), manufacturers put a lot of very strange things into the mixes and the results were often unstable. If the doll also has a strong smell of vinegar (this is actually acetic acid oozing out) then, unfortunately, there is nothing that can be done to restore it. It is also toxic and the only thing to do is to destroy the doll. This problem may only affect one part of the doll or all of it. Much research has been done in the UK and Australia, but has not yielded effective results yet.

Mattel®'s History

In Hawthorne, California, in 1945, a garage industry named Mattel® (taken from a combination of the owners' names, Harold Matson and Elliot Handler) took flight. Although picture frames were their first line of products, a side business venture began in doll furniture, which happened to be its most popular item to date—an 11" doll named Barbie®, after the one of Barbie®'s favorite companions. These dolls have become the best-selling fashion dolls in almost every global market. In 1968, another of Mattel®'s more popular products was introduced as Hot Wheels® collectible toy cars. This helped Mattel® to capture the hearts of little boys, as well as those of little girls. In the mid-70s, the Handlers left the company, and it turned to yet another new market—electronics. The new age of toys had begun, and Mattel® was not going to miss out. Since then, the company's success has kept it in the forefront of the toy industry.

owners' daughter, Barbara. Eventually, Barbie® took on many professions, modeled tremendous costumes and expanded her family.

The Ken® doll, named after the Handlers' son, would become
