History of Corn Husk Dolls

Corn husk dolls were originally made by Native Americans who taught the earliest settlers the technique. The dolls are about 8" tall and are made from dried corn husks. The skirt stands by itself. Hair can be made from corn silk. Accessories made of corn husks include: bags, brooms, babies and braided hats. The corn husks are worked wet, similar to basket-making. The husks may be natural color or sometimes dyed. Facial features may be drawn on but are sometimes left off. Occasionally a corn husk doll is fitted with the head of an apple doll for an attractive combination.

How To Make Your Own Corn Husk Doll

- ☐ 6-7 corn husks—pre-soaked for 30 minutes
- ☐ Raffia
- ☐ 2 buckets or a large sink to soak corn husks
- ☐ 2 colanders to drain corn husks
- ☐ Water source
- ☐ Paper towels and rags
- ☐ Yarn, corn silk, or extra corn husks (for hair)
- ☐ 6-8 pieces of string—1 for neck, 1 for skirt, 2 for hands, 1 for shirt, 1 for waist, 2 for legs

1. With raffia, tie 6 corn husks together, one inch from ends. Tie tightly and trim ends. Try: angel, bride, baby, child, flowers, basket, etc.
2. Flip three ends forward and the other three ends backward. Tie again, one inch down from the top of the head. Tie tightly. Tie at front for bow tie. Tie a knot at the back for plain neck. Trim short.
3. Roll one cornhusk for arms. Insert under the first three cornhusks. Tie at waist and wrists. For bendable arms, insert pipe cleaner when rolling arms. Tie at elbows. Add apron of shorter corn husk when tying waist.
4. Trim bottoms and spread corn husks to stand. For boy: divide from side to side evenly. Tie at ankles. For shawl: drape one corn husk around shoulders, tie around waist. For the hat, tie corn husk around head.

History of Papier-Mâché

Since the 16th century, papier-mâché was used in France to make dolls' heads. The first dolls were made with wooden molds and with the refinement of techniques, other materials were added to the base ingredients of papier-mâché, making the percentage of paper different in any single country. The most important materials used for dolls' heads were charge materials, alloying materials and cellulose pulp, raw paper, rag and de-fibered paper and dry fibrous material or damp mass.

Charge materials were usually easy to find in the same place where papier-mâché was produced: in India rice wheat was used, while in Germany, a substance called "brotteig" (bread dough) was used to make molded or manufactured dolls. The northern regions of England used mashed potatoes. Sand and clay were added to the materials used to make Italian and English dolls.

A solution of water and glue was mainly used as alloying material. Other countries used rubber or watered-down honey.

In some old recipes for papier-mâché, other ingredients are suggested, such as resin to obtain a smooth and strong surface. The German doll manufacturers sometimes added tobacco leaves. Ludwig Greiner of Philadelphia became famous in the United States for his dolls with papier-mâché heads covered with linen.
